We will always be grateful for each boy represented by each star and if the stars should be replaced by gold ones we will owe them a debt we cannot pay."

The meeting was concluded by a social time and refreshments.

TRENTON MAN IS KILLED BY TRUCK ON LINCOLN HIGHWAY

James Catana, 42, Meets Instant Death When He Apparently Walked Into Truck

WAS A FARM EMPLOYEE

Victim Said To Have Been Employed On Farm Near Bristol

Apparently walking into the side of a truck on the Lincoln Highway between Oxford Valley and South Langhorne, last evening, James Catana, aged 42, of Jackson street, Trenton, N. J., was instantly killed.

The victim had, according to another motorist, had a narrow escape from being struck by a passenger car just a few minutes previous.

Miss Marjorie Candy, Langhorne, former postmistress in that community, was en route to Trenton, N. J. Becoming upset when a pedestrian, who later proved to be Catana, was seen in the middle of the highway, and narrowly escaped being struck by her car, Miss Candy stopped at the home of a family named Nabb, and informed them of the man's actions. When she emerged from the Nabb home the pedestrian was found to have evidently attempted to cross the highway again, and is said to have walked into the side of a truck operated by Stanley Morgiewicz, of Pine Island, N. Y. Death was instantaneous.

Dr. Richard Marker, of South Langhorne, was summoned. Corporal Evans, of Penna. Motor Police, South Langhorne barracks, also investigated. The body was viewed by J. Alfred Rigby, Bensalem Township, deputy coroner of Bucks county.

The body was removed to the funeral home of R. L. Horner, Langhorne, and later forwarded to Trenton, N. J.

Catana, who was single, is survived by his mother and several brothers and sisters. According to his family, he had been employed as a laborer, and recently had been picking tomatoes on a farm near Bristol.

District Governor Speaks To Bensalem Rotarians

ANDALUSIA, Oct. 14.—Charles Churchman, governor of the 179th District of Rotary, and a resident of Easton, addressed members of Bensalem Rotary Club last evening.

District Governor Churchman's "pep" talk to Rotarians was titled "Rotary in the Time of War." He emphasized that while many Rotary clubs in the occupied countries have been disbanded by order, still there are a number of other countries in which new clubs are being formed; and still countless clubs which are expanding membership. The result, he stated, is that Rotary numerically is about where it was several years ago, in spite of losses in occupied countries. "Rotarians can't wave a wand to restore peace, but that is no excuse to be complacent," he continued. "We must try to foster good will. It is easy to be discouraged in times like the present, yet at this very time we need to encourage the individual clubs to carry on."

In making a plea for good will, Mr. Churchman emphasized the fact that labor and capital form a co-operative enterprise. "One cannot succeed without the other, and one cannot gain without the other gaining." He illustrated the Rotary Club slogan "He profits most who serves best," and added "Business is learning through Rotary that more can be gained by co-operation than by competition." The speaker reminded that the strained conditions of the present day are but temporary. Paraphrasing the Biblical quotation "Peace on earth, good will to men," he said "There shall be peace on earth to men of good will." In part he continued "Armies cannot stop an idea when the time is right for that idea."

A club assembly followed, during which various chairman gave reports of activities which were evaluated by the guest speaker. S. Penn Salmon presided during business transaction.

PLAN HAS DRAWBACKS

In the opinion of Municipal Judge George B. Harris, of San Francisco, fines do not seem to do much good in curbing traffic violations, so in future he plans to suggest that the motorist, instead of being fined, turn over a substantial part of his automobile to the scrap drive. The judge mentioned front and rear bumpers.

Before this "turn in your bumpers" craze goes farther, it should be pointed out—it has, in fact, been pointed out by motor clubs—that a bumper is an integral part of the frame of many cars and that these vehicles could not be operated without them. And no driver would be so optimistic as to park his car anywhere without bumpers and expect to find the fenders, to say nothing of the rest of the vehicle, whole upon his return.

There is another element in this idea of the judge's which he may have overlooked. This consists in asking the motorist who disobeyed the law to stigmatize himself as a violator. Pedestrians and other motorists, upon seeing a car go by without bumpers, would immediately know that the driver probably had been convicted of a traffic violation.

This in itself is bad enough, but relay traffic violations frequently constitute a blow at the war effort. Speeding causes excessive wear on tires and autos, accidents may result in loss of life or injury and property damage. Illegal parking may cost other people much time. Car-pooling through water puddles in the street at high speed force pedestrians to send their clothing to the cleaners, thus taking the time of workers in such establishment, and using up quantities of cleaning fluid.

So if Judge Harris' ideas were to prevail, a motorist who parted with his bumpers might be stigmatized not only as a violator of traffic laws but also as one who probably had at some time hampered the war effort. Absence of the bumpers from the car would—if it were still possible to drive the car—be a token of penitence. This nation long ago passed that day when law breakers were asked to display signs indicating they had violated the law.

If parts of automobiles currently in use are needed for scrap, it would be far better to ask all motorists to donate them as a patriotic act. In fractions of law should not be mixed up with demonstrations of patriotism. And if there is a single part of the modern automobile that can be dispensed with, automobile men have not stated what it is.

Corn crop estimates dissipate fears of a possible corn pone shortage.

tribute to Susan B. Anthony and others who had helped to advance the cause of women's rights.

The Senator gave an interesting description of the mechanism of law-making, from the introduction of a bill in the senate until it is finally signed by the governor.

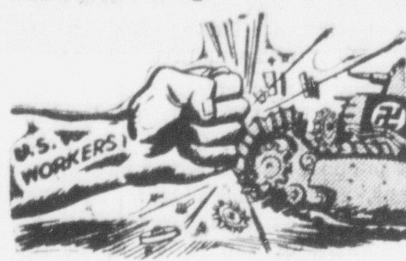

In Senator James' opinion, there is no comparison between the two men who are candidates for the governorship—General Martin who at a great personal sacrifice accepted the nomination, and Mr. Ross who is "politically controlled."

The speaker told the women that there is work on the home front just as important as the service of the men at the front. "If we on the home front don't provide the boys at the front with equipment and food, we cannot win the war. We must talk, act and think victory, and keep producing." He informed that Pennsylvania's allotment of men is one million. "We are making one-third of the equipment of war. We have already gained 35 percent in production."

Officers named last evening include: President, Mrs. David Sheerer; secretary, Mrs. Elwood Goslin; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Philip Ahlers; treasurer, Mrs. Minot Hill; directors, Mrs. Minerva Epstein, Mrs. Harry Frederick, Mrs. Horace Fleckenstein, Mrs. Thomas B. Stockham, Mrs. Lewis

Two-thirds of the drive and wallop and reach and power of American strength comes because our men and women are free men and free women, living under a system of free enterprise. Hitler and Mussolini and the dwarf war-lords of Japan drive their workers to the machines. Their labor is slave labor—forced labor of conquered peoples. "Free Americans can out-work and will out-fight the slave nations. That is why I am opposed to any attempt, even in wartime, to chain our workers by law to their lathes and drills and plows and machines. We must keep them free—and strong."

A large number of women were in attendance, a social time and refreshments following the session. To Mrs. Lynn, the retiring president, a beautiful vase of chrysanthemums was presented.

through voluntary co-operation of the people and intelligent administration direction. But that is what he hoped last year and it hasn't worked out—in fact, things have become so much worse that men like Governor Strassen of Minnesota and others feel a crisis exists. The truth is that this labor shortage is largely due to the President's disposition to consider that when a commission is created and a goal outlined, the job is as good as done.

HE WELL understood the problem and the need when he named Mr. McNutt, but he didn't follow through. And Mr. McNutt, without a law, without a policy and without authority, couldn't. Obviously, if

The Selective Service, the McNutt commission and the United States Employment Agency have all worked separately under separate heads and without complete understanding. And to this inability of the army to make up its mind precisely what size an army it wants and the present disturbing situation is the natural outcome.

IN HIS speech, the President shows a clear comprehension of the facts, but he failed to outline clearly the remedy. The only man thus far who has done that is Senator Taft, of Ohio. His bill may not be the perfect bill, but it is in the right direction. The Administration, however, is not disposed to adopt the plan of a Republican, particularly if Mr. Taft is the Republican. Yet, soon or late, an amalgamation of the several agencies under a single head is certain and a law will be needed. The job cannot be handled any other way, and to further temporize is to invite more trouble.

ASIDE FROM this, there are three quite simple ways by which the man power of the nation could be increased. One, the President could do by himself without any legislation whatever. He could give orders to reduce personnel in the Government service to the actual needs. In this way, he not only could release a very large number of the 2,500,000 civilians now on the Federal pay roll, either for the army or for work on farms or in factories, but he also would greatly increase efficiency of the governmental machine. The two other ways would require legislation, but that easily could be had with the President's support. One is to extend, during the war, the forty-hour week to forty-eight hours. The other would be to make strikes illegal. Upon these matters Mr. Roosevelt is silent. Yet there seems no sound reason why in this crisis labor should not make these "sacrifices," nor why Government employees should be any more sacred than employees in civil life.

GIRL IN THE GREEN COAT by HAZEL LIVINGSTON

SYNOPSIS

Gil Castle, society playboy, is murdered in Jan Proust's music studio in the Rollar Building. Returning home around midnight, Mary Driscoll, a newspaper reporter, had a feeling that someone was in the shadows watching her as she reached Jan's second-floor landing. Then the door of the vacant studio opposite his closed slowly. Terrified, she ran up to the fifth-floor studio she shared with Peggy Hudson, an interior decorator. Next morning the tragedy is discovered. All the tenants, except Jan, had spent the night in the building despite the management's order prohibiting sleeping on the premises. Mary telephones her office, but the thrill of a news beat is missing. She had been in love with Gil ever since she met him on a boat five years ago, but the feeling was not mutual and he had "dated" her only once since then. What had brought Gil to the shabby studio building—unless to see Jan? But Jan wouldn't commit murder. Certainly Gil wasn't interested in the other tenants. Emilie Raymond, the commercial artist, was the most attractive of all, but she had half a dozen suitors and, as far as Mary knew, Gil wasn't one of them. In relating her experience in the hall, to Inspector Hare, Mary adds that the door she saw closing was always kept locked. Superintendent Grant contradicts this, saying the lock had been broken for some time. Mary tells the story.

CHAPTER SEVEN

I walked out with what dignity I could muster. Uta was still expounding his nasty theory, I remembered with pleasure that Peggy always referred to him as Ug, the Ape Man. And then I remembered, without pleasure, that I had left Peg in a dead faint on the kitchen floor.

The thought of Peg and Emilie Raymond laid out in neat fairs on the kitchen floor put wings on my feet. I did not bother about the elevator, I tore up the three flights of stairs imagining horrible things all the way.

A fine sight it would be if one of the homicide squad beat me to it. Oh, why did I run off without waiting to find out if they were all right? Suppose the seemingly husky Peg had a weak heart? That didn't seem very likely, but then I did remember what I had forgotten in the excitement, that Miss Raymond was just recovering from a bad case of the flu, and flu does leave people with weak hearts.

I flung open the door, and almost knocked over a plain-clothes man who was on his way out.

"It's Mary Driscoll, she lives here," Peggy explained. She was sitting on the sofa with Emilie, and I need not have worried about them, they had both recovered.

Emilie had on my best jade housecoat, kindly lent by Peg, and was looking glamorous as usual, though she had looked like a sick scarecrow when I left her less than an hour before.

"What what happened?" I cried, as soon as the door shut behind the officer.

"Oh nothing, just about four dozen people battering at the door, asking foolish questions, and six cameramen taking pictures of Emilie. "They took pictures of you, too," Emilie said.

"Don't be absurd. It was you they wanted," Peggy snapped.

I wanted to laugh, but I didn't dare. Imagine Peg, big, successful Peggy Hudson being annoyed because a pretty little commercial artist gets her picture in the papers and she doesn't! To change the subject I said, "I was really worried about both of you. I shouldn't have left you, but I really had to get back to find out a few more things and make the next edition. I can't imagine you fainting. Peg—you never did before!"

"I didn't faint," Peg said. "Why, Peggy, you simply col-waste-baskets and bottles and many of the decorators, like Peggy, were beginning to call on her for special orders."

"I'll make some coffee, then we'll all feel better," Peggy said.

I said I would feel better when I was sure that Jan was all right.

"What's wrong?" they both cried. "I don't know. He hasn't showed up yet, and at the hotel they say he wasn't in last night, and his bed wasn't slept in. One of the inspectors is over there now. I'm going to have to check with him."

"Why don't you try reading your own newspaper?" Peg asked dryly.

"It was in all the papers," Emilie said. "I should think

Today's Quiet Moment

(By the Rev. James R. Galley)
Pastor, Bristol Presbyterian Church

O God, our Shepherd, give to Thy Church a new vision and a new charity, new wisdom and a fresh understanding, the revival of her brightness and the renewal of her unity; that the eternal message of Thy Son of salvation from sin, may be hailed as the good news of the present age, the message of peace and life. May Thy people around the world be cognizant of their responsibilities. May they be so strengthened by Thy Spirit that the day may not pass unheeded, but may rather bring forth that fruit and that blessing which Thou wouldst desire of it. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

ON THE SCREENS

GRAND THEATRE

A companion piece to "Mr. Chips" was found for Greer Garson in "Mrs. Miniver." Jan Struther's touchingly human story of an average English woman of the middle classes facing the horrors of warfare on the home front. The picture, teaming Miss Garson and Walter Pidgeon, tells of the quiet heroic courage and abiding faith of a people under air attacks and raids. It is now playing at the Grand Theatre.

The story deals with Mrs. Miniver and her husband, Clem, living in a quiet village. Their son is at Oxford. He joins the R. A. F., becomes engaged to the village belle. There are air alarms; episodes in air raid shelters.

RITZ THEATRE

Something new under the Hollywood sun, a "bent" motion picture camera lens, was used by Paramount in filming "Sweater Girl," the musical thriller-diller of campus life now at the Ritz Theatre.

Roy Rogers returns to the Ritz screen today in another outstanding musical western, "Red River Valley," which is scheduled to run for two days.

BRISTOL THEATRE

Don Ameche and Henry Fonda appear together for the first time since Ameche cinematically invented the phone in "The Story of Alexander Graham Bell," in "The Magnificent Dope," slated for the Bristol Theatre today.

Boston Blackie, fiction's slickest rascal, is said to solve his toughest mystery in "Alias Boston Blackie," which is opening today at the Bristol Theatre.

SUBURBAN LEAGUE TO MEET

There will be a meeting of the Suburban League managers tonight at eight o'clock in the Diamond Sporting Goods store, Mill street.

THE CAPITOL WHIRL

By International News Service
HARRISBURG, Oct. 14—(INS)—The refusal of the Democratic-controlled Board of Claims to recognize the authority of the Attorney General may force a State Supreme Court review. . . . The Board snubbed a legal decision by Attorney General Claude T. Reno in the case of Ellwood T. Bauman, Erie, a dismissed special inheritance tax appraiser for Auditor General F. Clair Ross, Democratic gubernatorial nominee. . . . Bauman, seeking $424 in back salaries and expenses, asked the Board to review his claim and render a decision. . . . When the Board approved his claim, Secretary of Revenue Edward B. Logan, who supervises payments by county treasurers and registers of wills to tax appraisers, ordered the registers not to heed the Board's orders.

State Treasurer G. Harold Wagner contended that the Supreme Court as well as the Justice Department has no authority over the Claims Board. . . . He maintained that he and Ross were not sitting on the Board as State fiscal officers but as duly-elected members. . . . Both Wagner and Ross counsel, Thomas W. Bender, acknowledged the authority of the high court and the Attorney General over all State officers but not on the Board of Claims. . . . The Supreme Court may be forced to clarify the situation.

Republican party leaders failed to go along on the suggestion of Democratic party chiefs that both parties waive the nomination of candidates for five vacancies in the House of Representatives. . . . But even though the Republican candidates will have no opposition, their election will not mean a thing. . . . The winners will serve only from the time their election is certified until November 30th. . . . They will receive no pay and will have no duties, unless, of course, Governor James decides to call a special session. . . . The only thing they will get out of their election is a short-lived sprint across the limelight of public life and a free Pennsylvania Manual, the handbook of Pennsylvania's government.

Governor James has indicated he will not appoint the fifth member of the State Parole Board until the State Supreme Court decides the validity of the parole act establishing the model parole system. . . . The Governor said that there was no assurance that the court would approve the law passed by the 1941 Legislature. . . . Scores of judges oppose the law because it limits their authority in parole cases and the Governor hinted that a couple of the members of the high court "were rather set in their ways." . . . Actually, if the court throws out the parole law, it can easily be remedied during the 1943 session of the Legislature. . . . Only difficulty that would arise would be the halting of salary payments pending approval of remedial legislation.

WHAT IS IN YOUR WARTIME PANTRY?

There is enough food in America to nourish everyone; and most of us can get all we need. Yet, as a nation, we are actually undernourished because we do not eat properly. Some things you won't be able to buy, others will be expensive. Many women now have to pack lunches for those employed in defense plants. Mrs. Marian C. Kemp, home economist, is showing women how to plan wartime meals at the big PANTRY PARTY held every Thursday and Friday afternoons at 2 o'clock in the auditorium of the Philadelphia Electric Company, Ninth and Sansom Streets, Philadelphia. Everyone is cordially invited, no admission charge. Mrs. Mabel Love, the hostess, has many free samples and attractive prizes for her hilarious "Quiz" Contest. Make up a group to come next week and enjoy the fun.

Brookville, Long Island, N. Y., on Friday, Oct. 16th, from 9:30 to 5:30. Extensive improvements are being made to the Sara E. Allen property on West Maple avenue.

More JAPS
MORESBY

As the first Jap bomber roared from the clouds, the Yank anti-aircraft cut loose: Quicker than you can say Hirohito, the sky was packed with bursting shells and flaming Jap planes plunging into the sea.

So it goes wherever Uncle Sam stands guard. Things happen thick and fast when the gunners swing into action. And when the gunners swing into action, make up your mind Greater Philadelphia is in the thick of the fight.

Anti-aircraft guns and gun mounts. Shells and precision instruments. You'll find them all among the thousand and one tools of war pouring from Greater Philadelphia factories to Democracy's soldiers on battlefronts around the world.

While Greater Philadelphia fighting men stand shoulder to shoulder with America's bravest, Greater Philadelphia workers toil tirelessly around the clock to provide more and better weapons for carrying on the fight. It is the will-to-win on both fronts that will keep Democracy safe.

PHILADELPHIA ELECTRIC COMPANY

THE POWER THAT MUST NOT FAIL

Behind every whirling factory is the power of electricity . . . a power that must stay smoothly, ceaselessly on the job for Victory.

One safeguard developed by Philadelphia Electric experts is a system of remote control switches by which a damaged area can be cut out of the circuit in a jiffy and electricity rerouted so as to serve adjacent areas with a minimum of delay.

Year in, year out—this system protects your comfort and convenience. Today it serves the double purpose of safeguarding the power supply of Greater Philadelphia's factories even if war should come to our own backyards.
